Finances and Markets

New York, March 21.—The stock market was hesitating and at times depressed today. This condition was accentuated by more active short selling on the part of speculators. The recent advance was interrupted effectively, although the losses were small.

The re-organization of the Missouri Pacific board of directors proceeded according to program, and went far beyond that point inasmuch as the Rockefeller-Kuhn, Loeb interests were given a commanding position in the directorate and executive committee of the road, and were also invited by Gould to a position of power and influence in the Gould properties. This indicates that such financing as may be needed for the purposes of rehabilitation and general improvement will not be lacking. The Missouri Pacific became weak on the announcement of the outcome of today's meeting and fell nearly 2 points to almost a point below yesterday's close. Although so far as known, no plans have been made for issuance by the government of 3 per cent Panama bonds, $10,000 of these bonds "when issued" were sold on the curb today at 102, which is a fraction above the ruling bid price for outstanding government 2s.

Explains Plans to the Members of the Woman's Club.

"Our High School, Its Needs and Opportunities," was the subject of an address given yesterday afternoon to the Woman's club by Professor A. K. Stabler. It was a most interesting talk and was listened to closely. The plans and colored pictures of the new building soon to be constructed did not reach Phoenix in time to be exhibited, but Professor Stabler used photographs to illustrate his address and answered all questions asked.

The civics education department was in charge of yesterday's program. Music was furnished by a double quartet of young ladies of the high school. Next Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 the Woman's club will meet with the Harmony club at Melzer's hall, the occasion being reciprocity day.

The board of governors of the Salt River Valley Water Users' association yesterday awarded the contracts for the machinery to be used in equipping the proposed power plant on the South canal between the Granite Reef diversion dam and Mesa City, where there is a drop of 26 feet in the canal.

The contract for the two 48-inch turbines, governors, pumps and accessories was awarded to the S. Morgan Smith company of York, Pa., for $16,500. The contract for the two electrical generators, transformers, switchboard, apparatus, etc., was awarded to the General Electric company of Schenectady, N. Y., for a lump sum of $30,000.

The Smith company was the only one that offered a bid on the turbines, but it was asked to make a bid also on four water wheels of the same size, with a view of buying the two extra ones for the equipment of the power house at the Arizona falls. If it could in the meantime be demonstrated that good results could be had from that size turbines, with the 1-foot drop at the Arizona falls, Consulting Electrical Engineer O. H. Ensign and the other engineers of the service carefully considered the matter and found that the wheels of that size probably would not be as satisfactory, so the award was made for the two turbines only.

In connection with the award for the other machinery, the expression "jump sum" should be explained. There were several bidders for that work, and each company bid separately on three items or classes of machinery, the generators, transformers and switchboard and accessories. The bid of these bids by the General Electric company was $32,131, but the bidder had also stated that if given the award for all three classes of machinery the contract would be taken for $20,000 even, and an award to that effect was ordered. As an indication that the association drove a good bargain with the General Electric company, it is pointed out that the next bid higher than the bid of that company was nearly $5,000 greater, and over $7,000 greater than the General Electric company's "lump sum" bid. The total cost of the machinery for the plant will be $46,590, while the association had expected to pay somewhere in the neighborhood of $50,000 for it.

It had been hoped that the other two turbines could be secured for the Arizona Falls power house at the same time, for less money than where bid for separately and made a special contract, but it was found that smaller wheels would give better results, so in due season special bids will be asked for when the turbines are needed.

It will take about four months to get the machinery contracted for yesterday, but just as soon as the dimensions of the machinery can be secured from the manufacturers under these contracts the plans for the power house will be drawn and the foundations will be made ready for the placing of the machinery as soon as it arrives, so it can be installed without delay. The power plant will probably be ready for operation early next fall.

Mr. Hill, Mr. Ensign and other engineers of the reclamation service were present at the board meeting and gave the governors the benefit of their advice and technical knowledge in deciding upon the awards.

HE'S A JOLLY KING.
Etiquette Gets a Bump Everywhere Peter of Servia Goes.

For the sake of the diplomatic corps accredited to the Quirinal, it is to be hoped that King Peter, who is now back in his capital, was as amusing in Rome as he was in St. Petersburg when he made a state visit to the czar last year. He startled the ministers and attaches, who were drawn up in one of the great halls of the Winter Palace to receive him, by his unkingly remarks. "How's your little shah?" he asked the Persian minister. And to the representative of a South American republic he said: "I used to know one of your compatriots in Paris. He was exceedingly rich, and how he went the pace!" His majesty has a perfect command of Parisian slang, and the last phrase, as it fell from the royal lips in the form of "Comme il a fait la bombe," was peculiarly astonishing.

But the King of Servia is not accustomed to the rigorous etiquette of a great court. At his palace a ball is a very easy going affair. A special room is reserved for the diplomatic corps, because—so they say—delicate young attaches are unable to support the smell of garlic which pervades the general company in the ballroom. From time to time a brave diplomat dashes out and hurries through the rattle-dazzle of a waltz.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

There are a good many popular men in this country, and a good many men who are given the name "great." There are a number of men who have the reputation of being "square," and a number who are credited with unselfish interest in the people's welfare. But the people of Arizona know, and if they don't know, Heard in the Lobbies believes anyone, that the most popular man, and the greatest man, and the squarest man, and the most disinterested and unselfish man when it comes to a consideration of the general good, is Theodore Roosevelt. There are two things about Mr. Roosevelt's character which have never yet been depreciated by any man, whether an enemy or a friend. One is his honesty, the honesty that made him speak his mind on the floor of the United States senate, and the other is his common sense, his common sense by giving ear to the other fellow. The Rough Riders' banquet was a private affair, but if the two rooms set apart for the favored few were made a sanctum sanctorum, it was not forbidden to look through the door and peer around. What does the Bible say? "He that hath eyes, let him see." Throughout the course of the banquet the colonel acted like a good fellow, an easy thing for him, since he is one, and the spectacle of an ex-president walking around with a plate of oysters in one hand and a busy fork in the other was a vision of democracy developed to the point that philosophers dreamed of. Once inside

A banquet offers a man an excellent opportunity to gain reputation as a stick, a poker, or a conciliatory burr, or it gives him an opportunity to unbend, prove his good fellowship, and assert his common sense by giving ear to the other fellow. Walking down stairs behind Colonel Roosevelt at the Ford hotel last Monday afternoon, the reporter observed that one of the buttons on his coat tail was about to fall off. Did the colonel care? Not a particle! Mrs. Roosevelt had probably said to him a half dozen times, "Why won't you let me have that coat long enough to sew the button on?" To which the colonel probably replied, "Let her fall. I am not worrying as much about that button as I am about Arizona statehood." No, the colonel is not worried about sartorial matters these days. Anybody who says he is will have to fight the Rough Riders, singly and en masse. If the last button on his vest is worn through that is a trivial matter too small for attention. If his trousers bag slightly at the knees, which they assuredly do, it is nothing to worry over. The entire Roosevelt family probably agree with the ex-president to have a new suit ordered, but the man who shakes hands with grimy workmen as equals and comrades knows the imperfection that a sporty suit often covers—or displays, and he prefers to go around in undecorated simplicity. Colonel Roosevelt leaves such things for mollycoddlers to worry over.

Why is Mr. Roosevelt discussed under "Heard in the Lobbies"? Because he visited the Ford hotel. His voice was heard in it, and for a brief hour he was a guest there. Will he ever visit us again? A question no one can answer.

Nothing worthy of the name of interview was had with Mr. Roosevelt during the short time he spent in the Ford hotel. He was approached by the reporter, but the sun and substance of his remarks was this: that he had nothing to say. It is impossible to write a book, a column, or a paragraph on such a discouraging statement. It was not an illustration of the constructive pragmatism. There was nothing to be drawn from it, for there was simply nothing in it at all—but a refusal. But if the colonel knows how to refuse an interview when he has nothing to say, he knows how to give one. No other public man has been as approachable to newspaper men, and no other public man has shown reporters such invariable consideration and courtesy.
